

Gardentry: Poems And Such Kat Way

April .

They promised me a flower-bed
That should be truly mine ,
Out in the garden by the wall
Beneath the ivy vine ,

The box-wood bush would have to stay ;
The daily rose bush too ;
But for the rest they'd let me plant
Just as I chose to do .

Though not a daffodil was up
The garden smelled of spring ,
And in the trees beyond the wall
I heard the blackbirds sing .

I worked there all the afternoon ;
The sun shone warm and still ;
I set it thick with flower seeds
And roots of daffodil .

And all the while I dug I planned ,
That when my flowers grew,
I'd train them in a lovely bower ,
And cut a window through ;

The visitors who drove from town
Would come out there to see ;
Perhaps I'd give them each a bunch
And then how pleased they'd be !

I made my plans-and then for weeks
Forgot my roots and seeds ,
So when I came that way again
They all were choked with weeds .
