Exploring the Intersections of Power, Identity, and Place

The Middle East is a region undergoing rapid and profound transformations, where the interplay of politics, culture, and urban space is shaping the cities and societies of the 21st century. This groundbreaking book delves into this complex and dynamic relationship, offering a comprehensive examination of how power, identity, and place intersect to create the unique urban landscapes of the region.

Key Features:

- Interdisciplinary Approach: Drawing from political science, sociology, anthropology, and urban planning, this book provides a multifaceted understanding of the Middle East's urban environments.
- Comparative Analysis: By examining cities across the region, including Cairo, Istanbul, Dubai, and Tehran, the book reveals the commonalities and differences that shape urban development in the Middle East.

- Historical Context: The book traces the historical roots of urbanism in the Middle East, providing a deep understanding of how the region's past has influenced its present urban realities.
- Contemporary Issues: The book tackles contemporary issues such as gentrification, urban inequality, and the role of technology in shaping urban space.
- Case Studies: In-depth case studies of specific cities offer rich insights into the lived experiences of urban residents and the challenges and opportunities they face.

Target Audience:

This book is essential reading for:

- Scholars and students in urban studies, political science, sociology, and anthropology
- Urban planners, architects, and policymakers
- Anyone interested in the complex relationship between politics, culture, and urban space in the Middle East
