Another legendary bank robbery is the Northern Bank robbery of 2004 in Belfast, Northern Ireland. In this audacious heist, a gang of masked gunmen disguised as police officers robbed £26.5 million from the Northern Bank headquarters. The robbery was meticulously planned and involved the use of multiple vehicles and a sophisticated escape route. Despite a massive police investigation, the robbers were never apprehended.

The Thrilling Train Robberies

Train robberies have long been a staple of Western folklore and adventure stories, and the history of crime is filled with tales of daring train heists that have captured the public's imagination. One of the most famous train robberies in American history is the Great Train Robbery of 1873, in which a gang of outlaws led by Jesse James robbed a Missouri-bound train carrying $3,000 in gold and $7,000 in cash. The robbery was a daring success, and the outlaws managed to escape with their loot.

Another legendary train robbery is the Great Train Robbery of 1963 in England, in which a gang of 15 masked robbers stole £2.6 million from a Royal Mail train traveling from Glasgow to London. The robbery was meticulously planned and involved the use of multiple vehicles and a sophisticated escape route. The robbers were eventually apprehended, but the majority of the stolen money was never recovered.

The Dazzling Jewel Stings

Jewel stings are a particularly audacious form of theft, requiring a combination of skill, cunning, and audacity. The history of crime is filled with tales of daring jewel stings that have left a lasting impression on the world of crime. One of the most famous jewel stings in history is the Hatton Garden heist of 2015, in which a gang of elderly thieves stole £14 million worth of jewelry and gold from a vault in London's Hatton Garden jewelry district. The robbery was meticulously planned and executed, and the thieves managed to escape with their loot.

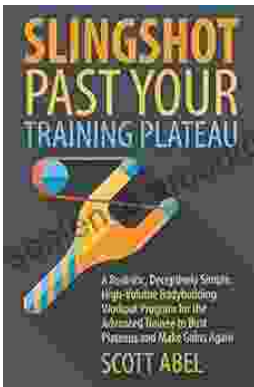

Another legendary jewel sting is the Antwerp Diamond Heist of 2003, in which a gang of thieves stole $100 million worth of diamonds from the Antwerp Diamond Centre in Belgium. The robbery was meticulously planned and involved the use of multiple vehicles and a sophisticated escape route. The thieves were eventually apprehended, but the majority of the stolen diamonds were never recovered.
